UD STUDENT GETS EXPOSURE TO INNER WORKINGS OF CITY OF DAYTON DEPARTMENTS

For most youths, operating a jackhammer might not be considered a highlight of their summer--but it has been for University of Dayton student Charles Rice. That's not all Rice has been doing this summer. As a W.S. McIntosh Scholarship recipient and a summer intern with the city of Dayton, he has been exposed to a wide range of civic opportunities.

"I worked a 24-hour shift with paramedics, an eight-hour shift riding in a cruiser with police, and I worked a full day at the Dayton Human Rehabilitation Center," says Rice, 17, a resident of Dayton and a 1990 Belmont High School graduate. He will major in mechanical engineering at UD this fall.

Rice is the fourth recipient of the W.S. McIntosh Scholarship, a full academic scholarship that includes a four-year internship with the city of Dayton. The scholarship, named after slain civil rights activist and Dayton resident W.S. McIntosh, was established at UD in 1987. McIntosh was killed in March 1974.

Rice credits the internship for broadening his knowledge of the inner workings of municipal departments. "I learned that a city is like a large corporation. Each department is like an entity in itself, yet it's part of a whole. I thought it was a bureaucracy, but I discovered that it's people --helpful and friendly--that help keep the city functioning."

NCR SCHOLARSHIP/INTERNSHIP HELPS EXPOSE UD STUDENTS TO CORPORATE WORLD

The plan was to keep UD student and NCR summer intern Adrienne Granberry busy with clerical work--but it didn't turn out that way. "We ended up using her in a much higher capacity," says Paul Krieder, manager of NCR's U.S. Group Tax Division. "She had the skills and learned very quickly what the tax concepts were."

The sophomore accounting major, along with sophomore management major Brian Mitchell, are the first two recipients of the University of Dayton/NCR Minority Scholarship Award--a full academic scholarship combined with a three-year summer internship at NCR. Mitchell also interned at NCR this summer in the company's worldwide inventory department.

"When I came to Dayton, I knew I wanted to work at three companies: NCR, Mead and Huffy," says Granberry. "I thought to myself, no sense in going back home (to St. Louis) without checking out these companies." So far, she has worked at Mead and NCR. Huffy, she says, is next on her list.

The experience she's gained as an intern has been worthwhile, she says, in giving her "a competitive edge in the job market and preparing "me for the real world."
